A special workshop which has been installed for these instruments, was under the command of a first lieutenant of the Soviet Army and about 20 soldiers were employed there. About 6 to 8 fire-control instruments were always under repair in this workshop. The instruments were completely disassembled including the single-axle trailer on which they rested. The instruments were cleaned and newly sprayed.

3. In late April 1956, an instrument mounted on a two-axle trailer with rotatable van-like superstructure was observed in the shop for signal equipment. The van-like superstructure was fitted with a rod structure, which could be folded upwards and, when moving, toward the rear. Two boxes, which contained plug sockets, were mounted on undercarriage. Four plug
